It is Bow Wow's first album to be released for LBW Entertainment, and her first album to receive a parenting counseling label for Adult Language. The album was produced by Jermaine Dupri, L.Roc, Nitti, T-Pain and Swizz Beatz, among others. The album also includes Swizz Beatz, Jermaine Dupri, Nelly, Trey Songz, T-Pain, Ron Browz, Dondria and T.I. Background Executive producer Jermaine Dupri based the album's title on the 1991 film New Jack City, believing that the relationship between him and Bow Wow was reminiscent of the resentful but successful commercial collaboration between Nino and Gee Money, the two main drug dealers of New Jack City, and that the album was like the success the two characters could have had in the film. a follow-up if they could resolve their differences. peacefully.[12] There are 3 versions for this album, a standard one, a limited edition (including a Bonus DVD) and a Walmart (which is just a clean edition, with three bonus tracks). Singles The first single from her sixth album, "You Can Get It All", was released with vocals by John Austin, and was produced by Jermaine Dupri and Bryan-Michael Cox.[13] This track contains an example of TLC's hit "Baby, Baby, Baby". The promotional single from the album, "Market Polo", featuring Soulja Boy Tell àÈm (who also produced the song), was released with a music video. The music video was filmed and filmed at Aquatic Park, near a suburb of Atlanta (known as Sun Valley Beach), in Paulding Co, GA.[14] The music video was previewed on Soulja Boy Tell àÈm's YouTube page and previewed on FNMTV on July 25, 2008.[15] The album's second promotional single, "Big Girls", accompanied by a music video, was previewed on YouTube (released the day after the release of "Marco Polo"). The full version was released later on YouTube for some time, but then removed again for unknown reasons. There is no official date for video republishing.
