expert on a subject, the less valuable will be your Opinions on the subject Well, I mean, there is no harm legitimately in offering and debating solutions about a problem to this abstract - I am not likely to find a problem with the IRL friendly there and ruin it because deep theory gave me a bad thing, it's me? Apply this to the creation of children though

- an obviously complex tangle of cause and effect that always has factors that you do not know in the life of each child, where each development can have butterfly effect About the result, depending on other variables and the problem becomes much more evident. It can not be solved with equations because it never has enough background. Yes, an omniscient umpteric entity omniscient with perfect knowledge of all current effect currents could solve the ethics with equations. He could know exactly what person kill to avoid the death of millions along the line. What is more likely: that we are going to build one so soon, or that we will build a simpler, to receive limited source information that need to obey conventional moral shortcuts not to ruin in situations Complex As? (A simple shortcut being "if you are not sure, do not interfere") (I think this is one thing that we really need to teach AIS in order to avoid catamastrof: if you do not have if I happened in a drink, omnipotent, but confusing about the istic and desire to enter, that it is now that he is more interested in how I left he asks him to act ) I would like this: knowing the consequences, withdraws conventional wisdom. If it is said to break things is bad, but the thing in your hands is an egg and you will make fried eggs, you can ignore conventional wisdom for this and make sure you do not apply. If you say that hitting children is bad, and you have a child in front of you that seems to be hit, you can not solve this equation with the premise I provided here. here. That's why my re-regrever tends to fail in tactical dilemmas on the Black Subjugal Callow scale in order to stop wars in the region. Its intention is that the long-range consequences of the action are good enough to overcome immediate damage. Are you going to go? It will work? How much did he manage to minimize immediate damage? The way the action is is rather depends a lot on real competence and competencies. I can not just look at the situation and say that it is an ethical decision or an antique decision, because it is always a bet. You are always betting on your solution to be better than the alternative, you never know for sure. All I can actually evaluate are your priorities in making decisions, and how much I like / don't @ I do not like them. This is what separates problems of problems is not ethical, as if there was no problem in breaking an egg. When the problem is simple enough for you to not be playing, it is not a problem. (Now, if another person's egg, but that someone has more eggs and a lot of food and they may not mind that you take an egg and you're really very hungry now ...) This is also my problem in evaluating how I think of errant bard: it literally depends on your competence. If your plans are like "everything is growing as planned, you just need to pull a curtain here or there to make things run even better" that makes the assessment of things like kill Sabah and sacrifice Hedge and Ash instead of different if your plans are like "shit shit. why not more than one thing works well at a time has to go try something else."
