I can't send text messages to a specific contact, but I can send messages to other contacts. If there's only one contact you can't send text messages, the problem probably radiates on the network and not on your device. Contact your network operator to see if you know a solution. If possible, it is also worth asking your contact to ask your network operator about the problem, too. If network operators can't help, contact Samsung's customer service to get more help. I can't text any of my contacts. If you can't send SMS messages (text) to any contact, but your phone works perfectly, this suggests that the number of the message center of your network operator stored in the configuration of your missing device or is incorrect. Follow these steps to check, and if necessary correct, that number. 1 Switch to the Applications screen. 2 Press Messaging (you may need to slide your finger to the left or right to locate it first). 3 Press the 3 points button More. 7 Locate Message Center. Directly below should be the phone number of your network operator's message center. (Check your network operator's website for your message center number to compare). If the phone number is different or missing, tap Message Center, enter the network operator's message center number and then tap SET. Then try to send a text message. If the text message remains unsubmitted, or if your phone has already stored the correct message center number, follow the following steps to delete the data in the Messages app. Delete the application data Messages 1 Change to the Applications screen. 2 Touch Settings (you may have to slide your finger to the left or right to locate them first). 5 Scroll downwards Messages and press down to locate them. 9 Try to send a text message.
