At a Glance Sharp 1080p video and shooting options Can use earbuds as external mic Controls are slow to respond Buggy, jumpy 4X digital zoom The full-featured Zi8 captures the best HD pocket-camcorder footage we've seen, but its interface and digital zoom often get in the way. Kodak has announced a new high-definition pocket video camera, the Zi8, which captures video in 1080p HD. The Zi8's predecessors, the Kodak Zi6 and the weather-resistant Kodak Zi1, maxed out at 720p. Along with recording 1080p HD video, the Zi8 can snap 5-megapixel still shots at a 16:9 aspect ratio. At $180, its price falls into the same range as earlier models. The Zi8 has an HDMI-out port and a swing-out USB arm (like the Pure Digital Flip Mino HD—a more expensive alternative) that enables users to upload files quickly. The Zi8 comes with only 128MB of internal memory, so you'll have to use the expansion slot for an SD/SDHC card to store most of the video. It's also the first pocket camcorder we've seen that has built-in image stabilization, which will certainly come in handy for recordings captured during high-speed unicycle chases. Also noteworthy is the Zi8's external microphone jack, though the Zi6 captured great sound, we didn't love the audio quality on the Zi1, so we appreciate having the option to add an external mic. The Zi8 comes in a new color this time around, as well: tart-but-delicious raspberry (in addition to aqua and black). The Zi8 looks pretty slick, but we'll let you know what we think of its alleged image awesomeness when we get a test model in. This newest addition to the Kodak camcorder family is to go on sale in September. Hit Channel 4 shows like 'The Sopranos' will soon be available to watch on Sky HD Channel 4 looks like it's going to be the first terrestrial TV broadcaster to offer a full-time HD version of its main channel. Possibly launching as soon as December this year, Channel 4 will be making its C4 HD channel available to all current Sky HD (opens in new tab) subscribers. Since launching in May 2006, Sky HD has become Sky's fastest growing additional TV product ever. Over 292,000 customers signed up to the service in the first year alone, presumably making use of newly purchased HDTVs. Channel 4 in HD Channel 4's aim is to offer our viewers maximum flexibility in accessing our high quality programmes and content at a time and in the format of their choosing. HD is a fast growing consumer technology and we believe our viewers will welcome the opportunity to watch their favourite Channel 4 shows in high definition," Rod Henwood, New Media director, Channel 4, said. Brian Sullivan, managing director at BSkyB, added: "High definition is transforming the TV experience and customers are responding in record numbers to the fundamental improvement in quality and sound quality." We want our customers to enjoy access to the widest choice of HD programmes so we're extremely excited about the launch of Channel 4 HD. Be it sports, movies, documentaries or entertainment, Sky HD customers can now access the richest selection of content in HD. Channel 4 HD will be available without subscription to viewers with a Sky HD box and viewing card. 300,000 viewers tuned into watch the Carling Cup final between Manchester United and Tottenham in HD. It's been very difficult not to notice Sky pushing its HD boxes these past few months, with many an advertising campaign extolling the virtues of hi-def content from the satellite operator. Well, it seems to have worked as Sky has announced today that it has doubled its HD subscription base and improved the amount of people signed on to Sky+ as well. HD taking off The figures suggest that now one in 10 Sky homes enjoy HD, which equates to 1.022 million customers. Just last year the figure stood at 465,000. Sky is putting this down to the low-cost of its HD boxes (slashed to £49 in a bid to bring in the punters) and its plentiful hi-def content, as Stephen van Rooyen, Sky's Director of Product Management explains: "The growth of HD is really starting to take off as more people discover the difference in picture and sound quality." Whether you're a fan of Hollywood movies, Test cricket, dramatic documentaries or operatic arias, you can enjoy more of the things you love in stunning high definition with Sky. "More time-shifting Interestingly, the latest figures also show more and more people are watching time-shifted content on both Sky+ and Sky Anytime. Apparently, Sky time shifted viewing from the Sky+ planner accounted for 17% of all TV viewing for all individuals in the 5 million homes with Sky+. It seems the time of getting your daily 7.30pm fix of EastEnders could soon be over. Like bananas, atoms, molecules and particles in the atmosphere absorb and scatter light. If they didn't, or if the Earth had no atmosphere, we would perceive the sun as a very bright star among others in a sky of perpetual night. Not all wavelengths in the visible light spectrum scatter equally, however. Shorter, more energetic wavelengths, toward the violet end of the spectrum, scatter better than those toward the longer, less energetic, red end. This tendency is due in part to their higher energy, which allows them to ping-pong around more, and in part to the geometry of the particles that they interact with in the atmosphere. In 1871, Lord Rayleigh derived a formula describing a subset of these interactions, in which atmospheric particles are much smaller than the wavelengths of the radiation striking them. The Rayleigh scattering model showed that, in such systems, the intensity of scattered light varies inversely with the fourth power of its wavelength. In other words, shorter wavelengths – like blue and violet – scatter a lot more than long ones when particles – such as oxygen and nitrogen molecules – are relatively small. Under these conditions, scattered light also tends to disperse equally in all directions, which is why the sky appears so saturated with color [source: Bohren]. If we were foolish enough to look directly at the sun, we would see all wavelengths, because light would be reaching our eyes directly. That's why the sun and the area around it look white. When we look away from the sun, at the clear sky, we see light mostly from shorter, scattered wavelengths like violet, indigo and blue. So why doesn't the sky appear violet instead of light blue? The eyes have it. Your peepers perceive color using structures called cones. Your retinas bristle with about 5 million cones each, made up of three types that specialize in seeing different colors [source: Schirber]. Although each kind of cone is most sensitive to certain peak wavelengths, the ranges of the cone types overlap. As a result, different spectra and spectral combinations can be detected as the same color. Unlike our auditory senses, which can recognize individual instruments in an orchestra, our eyes and brains interpret certain combinations of wavelengths as a single, discrete color. Our visual sense interprets the blue-violet light of the sky as a mixture of blue and white light, and that is why the sky is light blue. Do you have more burning questions about the planet? The reddish tinge of sunsets is due mostly to the fact that the sunlight travels through more atmosphere to reach our eyes. By the time the light arrives, it's been stripped of shorter wavelengths, which have scattered away, leaving only the longer-wavelength, direct illumination of sunlight's redder tones. By Dave Donovan DirecTV's DVR (Digital Video Recorder) provides storage that allows subscribers to record their favorite shows. The DVR allows customers to watch shows at their leisure: it even enables them to fast-forward through commercials, pause a scene for a bathroom break and rewind. But one thing that many users of the DirecTV DVR wish it wouldn't do is blind them with its brilliant blue light circle, which is prominently displayed on the front center of the box. Fortunately, it only takes a few steps to turn off the blue light. Press the left and right arrows on either side of the blue circle of light, which is located in the middle on the front of the DVR box. Press both buttons at the same time. This will dim the blue circle of light. Press the arrows simultaneously three more times and the blue light should turn off. Press the arrows at the same time once again and the blue light will turn back on. Five - HD coming to Sky in summer Just days after losing its slot on Freeriew HD, Five has announced that its HD channel will launch on Sky this summer. Ofcom decided that Five's plans for HD were not solid enough, withdrawing a slot on the Freeriew multiplex, but the broadcaster has not given up on high definition, with the channel to launch on the Sky satellite platform. Five offering will include its wealth of US offerings, such as the various flavours of CSI and FlashForward, and also sport and movies in HD. Five becomes the 42nd channel announced by Sky, and the latest in a wealth of recent announcements from both the satellite giant and cable rival Virgin Media. Opportunity mux "This is an exciting opportunity for Five," said Charles Constable, Five's Director of Strategy. Our programme schedule is more suited to HD than that any other major free-to-air commercial broadcaster given the wide range of high quality series we broadcast, such as our top-rated line-up of US dramas. "We're delighted to begin our HD journey with Sky." UK leader Hilary Perchard, Sky's Director of Product Management, added: "We're delighted to announce the addition of Five HD to Sky+HD, the UK's leading high-definition service. "Sky remains committed to delivering customers the best HD service available, and this means continuing to launch high-quality channels right across the schedule." With the best of free and pay TV now in HD, there's never been a better time to embrace HD. "Five HD will be available without additional subscription to viewers with Sky+HD boxes, a Sky viewing card and an HD-ready television set.
