Apart from the extremely economical way of working with refillable ink containers, the HP Smart Tank Wireless 450 printer has little to offer that is spectacular. As the only member of its brand family, the multifunctional device uses high-range bottled inks instead of disposable cartridges. The technical equipment should be better suited for document printing than for photo printing. The three-in-one functionality also handles scan and copy jobs. With features such as the manageable pace of work and the extensive renunciation of ergonomic comfort, the product design is aimed at target environments with moderate performance requirements. The workplace at home or a small office with a low print volume is a suitable location. HP Smart Tank Wireless 450 with up to eight A4 pages per minute, the pace of work is already moderate with black and white printing and drops even further with color printing to a maximum of five pages per minute. Full-area borderless printing is available as a working option. Features such as the automatic duplex process or an ADF module for the document feeder for scanning and copying are not part of the equipment. The paper management has to be content with an open feed for only 60 sheets. Good connectivity, slow printing, and tight paper capacity, In addition to the economical printing technology, well-equipped connectivity is one of the product advantages. The USB port on the individual workstation provides the connection from HP Smart Tank Wireless 450 to the computer. A WLAN interface is included for integration into the network. Local communication with smartphones and tablets takes place via WiFi Direct. The datasheet does not mention cooperation with cloud services.
