Description Contents Reviews The Chewa is the largest ethnic group in Malawi, accounting for a third of the population of about 19 million and their language - Chichewa - is the national language of Malawi. Yet the latest book on the history of this group was published in 1944 and was based on the oral history or tradition. As with many African history, oral history began to be recorded only in the late nineteenth century. This is the first book to use not only the oral history, but also documents written by early Portuguese explorers, traders and government officials, as well as archeology, to piece together the early history of the Chewa. The author is an archaeologist, who discovered the first major settlement Chewa, Mankhamba, near the southern end of Lake Malawi. The excavations have allowed him a more scientific history of migration of the Chewa in what is now Malawi and provided physical evidence of their early history and their material culture and their material and spiritual life. Professor Yusuf Juwayeyi has researched and written a history and a very readable description of archeology, which reveals the value of the combination of the oral tradition, archeology together to arrive at more accurate picture of the history of a pre-literate society. This book will be of value not only for historians, archaeologists and anthropologists, but also the general reader interested in African history. Yusuf M. Juwayeyi is an associate professor of anthropology at Long Island University, Brooklyn, New York.
