Continue with the last daily news with the Buzzfeed Daily newsletter! Eric Piasecki spread 2020 and all that time spent cooped up, but people from coast to coast are desire for interiors of country inspiration like never before. And there is no wonder. Nothing feels so welcoming as spaces designed to be inhabited, not simply admired. The rooms that break out with objects with time and wear, in turn, just look better over time, and immediately put all those who come to ease. Not to be confused with the beloved aesthetic of modern farmhouse, this new elegant shirks country style, utilitarian elements in favor of soft and inviting spaces with elegant details. Quite easy for an old house to reach. But what happens if you're starting with a new-ground-up construction? This was the question to architects of Historical Concepts and Interior Designer Barbara Westbrook when they were called by a couple of homeowners who loved the antiques that were ready to leave the city and settle in a life of pastoral pastimes and spaces Open. Having recently purchased their dreams ownership in South Carolinaâ €™ s Low Country, the couple was anxious to create an equally dreamy country house. But considering that the historical property was part of a land concession of 1697 by King Charles II of England, not just any house would have done. â € œ œl customers are very historically designed, â € œ says Terry Pylant of Historical Concepts, which served as a lead designer on the project. â € œThe original house was burned, it was important for them that the new home reads as if it had been there forever. "To achieve this goal, the team studied nearby historical houses, cutting elements like salt from Dancing and argulated arcades, which are well suited for a current lifestyle. The integrity of the materials was also a cornerstone of the project. The 200-year-old pine pine floors, for example, came from a textile factory of New England by now destroyed. The recovered plans were installed with all the holes of their previous life still intact; Then some were filled with wine stoppers to give them the essence of a first nineteenth century structure. The same animated touches can also be found in the numerous well-known antiques that Barbara has introduced throughout. That unique punch of architecture and patimated design do for a house that marries with new "old" style. Advertising - Continue reading Under Add ElAf with ... metal tetons no longer just the domain of humble cabins, the metal coating is a witness of a revival -Valida both for its durability and clean lines. Here, it makes a perfect match The equally classic white exterior. Also ZAPS The most formal columns and cresting of any claim. Add the age with ... a covered patio do aside bunches and porches covered, there is a new lady in the city. Or the country, rather. Pati dishes covered by pergola (crossroads and a robust open pattern are to the side of the house) provide the best of both worlds with a ventilated area that just gets enough sunlight and enough coverage. Here, the pergola provides both a potting station and a refreshment point; the elegant architecture helps the area looks like a real "room". Add Age with. Brick floors In the bathroom, handmade bricks are arranged in a beautiful pattern of fish bar with white mortar showing their irregular edges. "We designed the room with materials that would be there 100 years ago," says designer Terry Pylant. "Brick is a traditional choice for high traffic and utilitarian spaces." Pairing the brick floor with furniture green nautical walls replicates the surrounding landscape. Add Age With. Steel windows Grills of crisp of mullions and muntin in steel can be the windows of choice for modern farms, but in reality they are nothing new. "In the 1920s and 1930s, as the country houses were updated to include newer services, it was common practice to enclose ex-airport passageway with steel or iron windows, creating bright and picturesque large rooms," Terry says. For this sunny day area (the windows measure almost 13 feet high!) Barbara chose wicker armchairs (mulligansusa.com) and a chaise lounge for a return to the same era. The mismatch of silhouette and colors adds animated variety among the new pieces. Get the look: wall painting: warm grey of Pratt & Lambert Add age with. A working table island Instead of a standard island, Terry designed a marble table to anchor the kitchen. "For centuries, kitchens have characterized a freestanding storage room. To avoid a "conference room" look, she chose handcrafted chairs (warrenchairworks.com) in different styles and finishes to surround the old farm table. "It looks like you picked them up from different places", she says. Add Age with... Cypress Panels âltas a natural calm that comes oversize (roseetarlow.com) pendant to balance her large scale. In addition, a cabinet provides storage for the needs of less compelling kitchen, and a down drain mouth allows uninterrupted windows counter-ceiling. Country Comeback: Beehive Oven Named so because of its shape similar to skep, these brick-clad stoves were housed in the open heart of colonial-era houses. In today's kitchens, pizza ovens an apothecary atmosphere with black walls inks and a gallery of shadows displaying vintage shaving items. When the antique sink purchased for the space turned out to be too short, Barbara mounted it on top of an old tombstone found on the property. Millwork Painting When she came to the rooms, Barbara took inspiration from her time dating William & Mary in Williamsburg, VA. âGlued milling is something you see everywhereâ, she says. Against the background of an airy neutral, the stately shadows of blue show beautiful, hand-crafted milling, including the classic arched window that still the guest suite. The room's triple threat of upholstered heads, piece quilts, and patchwork benches makes for an undeniably cozy retreat. Country comeback: fans belt The belt fans offer all the comforts of a ceiling fan with a return design. Powered by pulleys, the devices have been developed at the end of the 1800s and has proved particularly popular in southern department stores and restaurants. No matter the location, they provide a sculptural element with a decidedly old air.
