A shiny new batch of awesome for my "favorite of all time" shelf. It's been a while since I've had so much fun reading a novel that, at the same time, left me intellectually stunned as Joseph Heller's classic sermon on the madness of war. What a sublime and literary feast. To prepare: 1. It begins with a surreal, Kafkaesque view of the world mingled in chaos; 2. Knead into a texture reminiscent of Pynchon, making sure that the bizarre, placidly disjointed surface completely mimics the new series of fantastic A's for my "favorite of all time" shelf. It's been a while since I've had so much fun reading a novel that, at the same time, left me intellectually uncomfortable. Stunned as Joseph Heller's classic sermon on the madness of war. What a sublime and literary feast. To prepare: 1. It begins with a surreal, Kafkaesque view of the world mingled in chaos; 2. Knead into a texture reminiscent of Pynchon, taking special care that the bizarre surface, placidly disjointed, completely camouflaged the central message, powerfully blurred and falsely focused; 3. Marinade it all in a dark and hilarious satire that would have made Voltaire shine like a proud father. 4. Bake to 350, season with spicy prose and serve. Here... a singular, absurd piece of inspired genius that I can't recommend more highly. This novel was much more than I expected. Despite his pervasive humor, laughing out loud, Heller's story is the most terribly effective depiction of the madness of war I have ever read. I am not referring to the wicked and vile atrocities perpetrated during the war, so widely catalogued in the annals of literature. Rather, Heller's intuition is oriented to show us the illogicity of war, the out-of-control nihilism and the chaotic existential absurdity of this observation comes from someone who has never been close to war as in the opening scene of Saving Private Ryan. Ryan. He's brilliant. SUMMARY: I think that any attempt to summarize the plot is destined to be inadequate, so let me briefly frame the story. The novel follows the actions of the 256th fighter squadron, stationed on the fictional island of Pianosa, during World War II. With a large cast of characters and a non-chronological narrative that constantly changes viewpoints, Heller creates a delightful cauldron of madness and bureaucratic ineptitude that is the paradise to follow. Our main tour guide in the asylum is Captain John Yossarian, a bomber pilot, whose main ambition in life is "to live forever or die in the attempt." Yossarian's desire for life is so strong that he can't even distinguish between the "enemy A" and his superiors. As for him, the enemy A whoever will make you kill, no matter which side it is on." To avoid the end of death, Yossarian devises a series of ingenious (and hysterical) methods to stay alive, including poisoning his squadron and redrawing the combat map during the "Great A" Great Siege of Bologna to alter bombing. Despite his often unethical jokes, Yossarian acts as a conscience of history and helps to keep in context the madness and rampant chaos. His A the voice of unworthiness and the just anger against the war and the cold, faceless bureaucracy that perpetrates it. Even against the God who allows existence such horrors. "Don't tell me that God works in mysterious ways A", continues Yossarian, whizzing his objection. "Theres nothing so mysterious about this. He's not working at all. He is playing. Or he forgot about us. This is the kind of God you're talking about. A country

And a personal favorite (all to the last line a): the chaplain had mastered, in a moment of divine intuition, the convenient technique of protective rationalization, and was exalted by the Discovery. It was miraculous. It was not at all a trick, saw, turning vice into virtue and slander into truth, truth, in abstinence, in arrogance, in humility, in looting in philanthropy, in honour, in blasphemy in wisdom, in brutality in patriotism, in sadism in justice. Whoever could do it didn't require any brains. It simply didn't require character. Finally, I wanted to share with you one last great piece. Below is the content of the letter sent by the commander to the wife of one of the protagonists. Gentle lady, sir, lady, or mister... Words cannot express the deep personal pain I felt when your husband, son, father or brother were killed, injured or reported missing. Inestimable.
