Some of these characteristics are more highly demanded by employers than others. Your objective is to recognize the skills that are most important for the job you seek and demonstrate how you used them on past jobs. Skills employers require are usually listed in the job description for each position. Employers want employees who are articulate -- possessing excellent writing and speaking skills. You must be able to provide simple but clear instructions for your subordinates. This enables your employees to execute tasks correctly and efficiently. You must also know how to break complex issues or data into usable information, whether writing a report or presenting information at a meeting. Use action verbs during the interview to describe your past responsibilities. Explain how you executed a particular project, managed a budget or negotiated a contract with an outside vendor. Employers expect you to be well organized for most jobs. You are required to answer emails, attend meetings and meet the daily demands of your job efficiently. You must also handle a number of projects simultaneously, assigning various tasks to employees to meet deadlines. The best way to demonstrate your organizational skills during an interview is to explain how you divvy up your work and consistently meet those deadlines. Discuss daily planners or weekly project status logs you use for managing all projects. Show the interviewer a copy of a current project log. Analytical skills enable you to assess business situations, evaluate alternatives and address key business issues. You need analytical skills to uncover and solve problems for your employer. These problems might include diminishing market share or sales because of aggressive competitors, or slow production. Whatever the case, describe how you assessed and solved problems in previous positions. Provide numerical results when applicable. Most companies require their employees to work on teams. These teams can be cross-functional, such as marketing working with product development and accounting, or interdepartmental. The important thing is that you demonstrate how well you work in a team environment during the interview. Discuss SAR stories where you interacted with others to complete projects. SAR means situation, action and results. The situation is the summary of the project, including important goals. Actions may include details about with whom you interacted to complete the project. And the results include the positive contributions you made on a particular team. Computer skills are also essential for business professionals. Most employees are expected to know how to use various word-processing, email, spreadsheet and presentation software packages. You might also need database software skills to manage lists of customers or track promotional campaigns. Tell the interviewer what computer software skills you have. Emphasize your expertise level with each type of software. For example, your finance job might require intermediate or advanced spreadsheet skills. what's a nice word that starts with j
