Travel trailer weights relative to RVs or motorhomes are often the reason people go for them. Not only do they tend to be lighter, but they're often (believe it or not) more versatile. After all, you can simply detach a travel trailer from your car if you want to go for a drive without it. Travel trailer floor plans and purposes also vary, so you can find one that perfectly suits your needs. Settling on a travel trailer over an RV is just the first step; next you need to choose from an ever-increasing range. Here are some of the basic options. Don't be fooled by the name. The standard or conventional travel trailer is really anything but; sizes, layouts and prices range widely. But they do have one thing in common: They make sleeping outdoors feel like home. Some models offer full kitchen and bathroom facilities, along with multiple sleeping areas. In other words, they offer almost the same functionality as a Class A/Class C motorhome or RV. For this reason, the standard travel trailer is a favorite among RV converts. The largest models can sleep up to 10, so they're ideal for large groups—even when you're traveling in different cars. The lightest travel trailer models, by contrast, can be pulled by a family sedan. So all you have to do is hitch it up and drive away. Expect to pay upwards of $6,000 for new small travel trailers, and up to $95,000 for some of the high-end models. The idea behind the pop-up tent trailer is simple: Clamping. Ideal for those who love the allure and simplicity of a tent, but can't put up with the discomfort, this option represents the best of both worlds. When you want to "pitch" your tent, simply park up and extend the shelter from the sides of the trailer unit. Depending on the model, there might be a kitchenette and separate sleeping areas built in. But whatever option you go for, the pop-up tent trailer is one of the most compact, lightweight options. Used ultralight travel trailers of this sort may be found for less than $6,000. But be prepared to pay up to $22,000 for a high-end brand new model. There's not a great deal to say about this option. Just imagine a cross between the standard travel trailer and the pop-up tent alternative. It's somewhere between the two. Think of it as glamping plus. On the one hand, you have the lightweight, compact utility of a pop-up, while on the other you have the amenities (kitchen, bathroom, etc.) of a more conventional trailer unit. They range between 19 and 30 feet in length and might cost $10,000-30,000. This one's slightly different in that it's not designed for living aboard. Instead, the toy hauler model of travel trailer is intended for the transportation of your "toys": Your motorcycle, your jetski, your ATV or whatever you else you want to bring along. Also known as a sports utility recreation vehicle, it's usually fitted with a rear door that opens out as a landing ramp. Since they're not intended for living aboard, they may be best suited to traveling in a convoy, with one vehicle trailing the toy hauler and another trailing a large standard trailer. Truck campers are all about freedom. But you'll need a flatbed truck. Rather than hitching a trailer to the rear of your vehicle—a hazard when it comes to winding roads—this model fits neatly into your flatbed. Of course, they're not the best option if it's interior space you're after. But there's an undeniable elegance to the design. And, since your trailer hitch is left free, you can also tow a boat, toy hauler or suchlike. Expect to pay $6,000-$55,000. Fifth wheel trailers are designed for pickups with a fifth-wheel hitch, they're bigger than the standard travel trailer but in many ways along the same lines. Hence, they're popular among RV fans who want the versatility of driving around separately. Models can measure up to 45 feet in length, and they often feature full kitchens and bathrooms. Some might even offer laundry facilities. For that reason, they're ideal for extended vacations and full-time travelers. They're not cheap, though; the top-end models may cost as much as $160,000 or more. Short for "application," apps let you do everything from listening to music to syncing your phone to your car to playing games. With so many apps to choose from, however, it can be a bit daunting if you don't know how to download them. Fortunately, downloading apps can be quick, simple and easy regardless of the kind of technology you're using. Read on to learn about how and where to download apps. When you download a file on the net, whether from a store or elsewhere, a file hosted on an online server is copied onto your computer. If you've ever been online, either on a phone or computer, you've likely already downloaded files on many occasions. Apps are no different — they're just specific kinds of files you download from the internet. Photo Courtesy: Scott Barbour/Getty Images Apps are typically set up as executable (.exe) files, although apps meant for Apple devices often come as either APP (.app) or DMG (.dmg) files. Sometimes (especially when it's meant for computers), an app is compressed into a ZIP file (.zip or .zipx) to save space. To do this, you may need another program, such as WinZip or 7-Zip, to open it, although you may also be able to open it by left- or right-clicking if your device came with the ability to open ZIP files. In many cases, however, downloading an app is as simple as clicking a button on an app's page. As long as there's enough space left on your device, the app will likely be ready for use once it's done downloading. Android is an operating system used for phones, tablets and more. Odds are that if your phone isn't an iPhone, it's probably an Android device — brands include Samsung, Huawei, LG, Motorola, ZTE and many more. To download apps for an Android device, you can either visit the Android website or use the Google Play app. (It's often pre-installed on phones and tablets, so you may already have it.) Be aware that you'll likely be prompted to sign in with your Google account or create one if you haven't already. Photo Courtesy: SOPA Images/Getty Images Open the Google Play store on your device and then search for the specific name of the app or any broader category that might interest you. Click on the app result to learn more about it. If the app is free, it should begin to download; if not, you'll be prompted to pay for it. Either way, once the file is downloaded, you're good to go. Microsoft hosts apps on its website, which you can access via any device with a web browser. You can use the site to download apps for tablets, computers, phones, Xbox consoles, virtual reality sets and more, so it's important to check the system requirements on each app's page to ensure that the app is compatible with your device. The Apple App Store hosts apps designed for iPhones, iPads and other Apple devices. As with Google Play, it's often pre-installed on phones. Like other app stores, it lets you filter apps by category, including featured apps, newest apps, popular apps, themed categories and more. Choose the app you want and follow the onscreen directions to download it to your device. You'll need to log in or create an account complete the purchase.
