Some of them work perfectly, while others show poor quality performance. Today we are taking a closer look at 5 popular strategies that you should know and think about giving them an attempt. The odds are, you will find a strategy that fits your personal trading style. Momentum Trading The strategy of momentum is easy to understand (but not always easy to implement) — when it follows, traders wait for the good to demonstrate the rapid movement and then open the agreement. The move can be in both directions, as it is possible to open long and short positions. Both technical factors and fundamental factors can trigger massive price movements and must therefore be closely watched by the trader. In case of companies listed in stock exchange, reports of earnings and important news are the type of events you are looking for, as both have the potential to change stock prices a lot. For currencies and cryptocurrencies, technical factors are equally important. Strong upward and downward trends can begin without fundamental explanations. In orderProtect yourself from sizable losses you may want to use the stop-loss orders. If the price moves in the opposite direction, the agreement automatically closes, helping you to better manage the risks. Scalping StrategySeveral small wins can be as good as a great victory. When trading in accordance with this strategy, traders set to buy and sell thresholds before opening the deal and watching the price of the asset move in the desired direction. When using scalping strategy, offers can be as short as a few seconds. Scalers should be ready to act quickly and make financially important decisions at an instant. It is worth saying that due to extremely short times, there is no place for fundamental analysis in the scalp. Pullback Trading Strategy Here's what pullback traders do: they find an asset (a corporate stock or an ETF) with a positive trend and expect it to move in the opposite direction. Note that it should be a short-term reprocessing, not an emerging negative trend. You might consider opening a long position when the reprocessing is about to die and the price action can be expected to move on once again. The same can be done on a negative trend. You could expect a downward trend to demonstrate limited upward movement (again, not a full-fledged) and might consider opening a short position when the price is at its most local. Breakout Trading Do you remember the levels of support and resistance? This strategy aims to put them in good use. Usuallythe price of the asset reaches a certain threshold that is not able to exceed (called the resistance), will retrace and exchange at lower levels. However, as many technical experts believe, when the price of good goes above the level of resistance, you can expect to continue its rally upwards. Note that sometimes price action can move over and below the level of resistance freely and this strategy will not work. News Trading Probably the most promising strategy for those interested in fundamental analysis. We all know that the main news and events are of fundamental importance in the world of trading. Almost any resource, whether it is a national currency, a cryptocurrency, a bag or a commodity, can be moved by an important economic/political event. The good news tends to move the price of the highest good, bad news — lower. If everything is so simple, what is so complicated about news trading? Predicting the news before it hits the market and making a proper prediction is difficult. Sometimes markets behave illogically, and global positive news trigger a decrease in prices. So, you have to be prepared for this. Whatever strategy you choose, there are several things to remember. No strategy is proof of failure, all of them will prove negative results from time to time. Consider trying different strategies, finding what fits and masters it. Several lost business in a row does not mean that strategy does not work. Probably means you've experienced a loser strip. Ever sincestrategies reduce the chances of success. At the same time, do not be afraid to stop a certain strategy should really stop working for you.
