The deck's main competition comes in the shape of the Toshiba BDX5300 and the Sony BDP-S1100.LG BP420: FeaturesIf you're looking for well-equipped deck that won't break the bank, the LG BP420 certainly fits the bill. The deck offers access to a decent selection of streaming internet TV, including BBC iPlayer, Netflix, Lovefilm and YouTube, and 3D disc support is standard. The BP420 is also DLNA compliant and offers extensive multimedia file playback both from local USB and across a network.LG BP420: ConnectivityThere's a predictable selection of outputs. HDMI is joined by Ethernet, phono AV and digital audio. Unfortunately Wi-Fi is AWOL, so you'll need to wire accordingly (a HomePlug solution is easiest if you don't have a networked room). A front-panel USB input, disguised by a rubber bung, offers local content playback.LG has polished the interface of the BP420 so much it gleams. This thoroughly intuitive deck is fun to use and blindingly fast when it comes to navigation.LG BP420: PerformanceThe player may be borderline budget, but its HD image quality is clinically precise and vibrant. It also makes the most of standard-def DVDs too, upscaling them to 1080p without introducing any unwanted artefacts.Media handling is class leading, with all popular codecs and wrappers supported, including AVI, MOV, MKV, MP4, MP3, WMA, WAV and AAC/M4A. You can even play FLAC from USB. Disc loading speeds, even with heavy Java-infused discs, are good. The Bond classic Goldfinger goes from tray to onscreen menu in just 48s, while a simple Java-lite disc takes a mere 34s.Proof positive that there's no need to slum it even when the budget's tight, the LG BP420 is a pucker Blu-ray bargain. It looks neat, with its squared off corners and glossy fascia, while beneath the lid lurks a fast-loading, well appointed player.Once networked via Ethernet it rewards with a huge amount of catch-up and IP telly, including iPlayer, Netflix and Lovefilm. The deck also doubles as a versatile media player, compatible with all key codecs. Icing on the cake is crowd-pleasing picture quality.LG BP420 availability: NowLG BP420 price: £100 TODAY'S BEST DEALSWe've seen it all before here on TechRadar, but the sheer size and scale of the new LG 49WL95C ultrawide monitor still blows our tiny minds.The full 49-inch diagonal of the curved LCD panel is impressive enough on its own. But it's the 32:9 aspect ratio that makes this monitor so incredibly eye popping. It's just so wide.Stunning the LG 49WL95C most certainly is, therefore. But does that actually make for a usable, practical and enjoyable display? Given the $1,496 (£1,160, AU$2,085) price tag, it had better. It's also worth noting that the LG 49WL95C is not alone in the market. The Philips Brilliance 499P9H, for instance, matches it in most significant regards and undercuts it substantially on price.(Image credit: Future)Anyway, as with that Philips display, the biggie in literal and figurative terms here is the 5,120 by 1,440 native resolution. In most contexts, that would be a lot of pixels. On a 49-inch panel? Not quite so much. It's actually fewer pixels overall than a conventional 4K or UHD monitor. It also makes for a somewhat underwhelming 109 pixels per inch.Black Friday deals: see all the best early offers right here.Overall, the LG 49WL95C feels very generous in its horizontal aspect. It's physically very wide and the 5,120 horizontal pixels provide plenty of space to arrange multiple apps and windows. Vertically, it's less impressive. The 1,440 vertical pixels fall well short of the 2,160 of a 4K monitor and leave you feeling slightly constrained.At this price point, we'd be happier with the full 4K vertical resolution and then a boosted horizontal pixel count to suit, which in this case would work out to 7,680. That would also improve the pixel density and sharpness.(Image credit: Future)Anyway, that aside the image quality is strong but not spectacular. LG has specified a 200 IPS panel with good colours and viewing angles. But it's not a particularly high fidelity. For starters, it only covers 79% of the Adobe RGB colour space and 99% of sRGB. Not bad figures, per se, but not the stuff of demanding content creation either.Similarly, while the LG 49WL95C is HDR10 compliant, with a peak brightness of 350cd/m2 and no local dimming, this is a monitor that can process HDR content but can't really display HDR visuals. As for gaming, you'll need a hefty graphics card to drive the LG 49WL95C smoothly. Even then it's limited to 60Hz, which isn't ideal for shooters. Immersive it certainly is, and the sound quality from the built-in speakers is actually pretty tolerable. But the LG 49WL95C is not intended to be an out-and-out gaming panel. Check out our pick of the best gaming monitors for better alternatives.(Image credit: Future)That said, it has some nifty additional productivity features. There's USB-C connectivity with 85 watts of charging and LG's Dual Controller software allows you to share the display over two PCs using a single keyboard and mouse. It's not a KVM switch, strictly speaking, but it allows similar functionality and more.Speaking of connecting PCs, in our testing there was no problem driving the display at native resolution with laptop and desktop PCs.But a 2017 Apple MacBook could not drive it at native resolution, despite being 4K capable and the fact that the LG 49WL95C has fewer pixels than full 4K. Our advice is to search online for any compatibility issues before you buy.(Image credit: Future)Finally, the quality of the chassis and stand of the LG 49WL95C is worth a mention. It's beautifully put together, with a reassuringly robust stand that offers height, tilt and swivel adjustment.Buy it if...Don't buy it if...These are the best ultrawide monitors of 2020TODAY'S BEST DEALS As Black Friday spread to other parts of the world, many see it as a sign of excessive consumerism and worker exploitation.Stocks end mixed Wednesday during the last full trading session before Thanksgiving.Adobe is expecting record online sales of $207 billion for the shopping season between Nov. 1 and Dec. 31Barclays made a list of 35 stocks with overweight ratings that it expects to benefit from strong earnings next year. TODAY'S BEST DEALSThe LG Styler is a smart steam closet and it's a bit of a monster. Head to Korea and you'll see whole rows of these appliances in electrical retailers and, to a lesser extent, the US has embraced the steam closet too. But the LG Styler is undeniably niche. So is it an indulgence that you can do without? Or does this clever upright slab of tech do things for your clothes that the dry-cleaners can't? It certainly offers convenience, as you can pop in a jacket, shirt and trousers for the night and have them fresh and ready-to-go for work the next day. However, with just three hangers and a trouser holder in the door this is not a high-volume machine.The LG Styler doesn't have as much capacity as you might like (Image credit: Rob Clymo)Price and availabilityBlack Friday deals: see all the best early offers right here.The LG Styler is out now and is available for £1899/$2099/AU$3299 directly from LG or from John Lewis in the UK. At the time of writing John Lewis had availability on the black door model. If you're in the US or Australia then the LG website can help you track down stockists. These are high-value items and with the niche appeal you may find they're slightly harder to get hold of than many everyday items like washing machines and tumble dryers.As for comparable products then the Samsung AirDresser is a similar style appliance and is another high-priced unit that costs £1999 direct from Samsung in the UK. No pricing is currently available for the US, though it does appear to be available in Australia for AU$3299.LG Styler and 'TrueSteam' technologyThe Styler works by using LG's TrueSteam technology. The company claims it 'eliminates over 99.9 percent of the germs and bacteria found in clothing and home furnishings', which has been certified by the British Allergy Foundation. So there would appear to be merit in the claim. While the appliance does not wash clothes it does have a pretty potent steaming capacity. It combines the steaming process with movement that comes from a hanging rail at the top of the cabinet that effectively shakes out creases and dislodges dirt and dust into the bargain. Meanwhile, the door houses a fold-out plastic panel that you put trousers in, which is billed rather curiously as Pants Crease Care.LG's Styler has four core functions. There's Refresh, for suits, dresses and sweaters, which can be used to resurrect tired outfits in as little as 20 minutes. Gentle Dry, meanwhile, does a more genteel job of tumble-drying clothes in comparison to your normal spinning appliance. Shrinkage is minimised as a result. Crucially, there's a Sanitary mode, which is the functionality that eliminates allergens and bacteria. Finally, the Trouser Press option will return your creased trousers to their shop-bought feel.Things get fairly toasty inside too. Steam generated within the LG Styler tops out at 60 degrees. You can also mate the LG Styler with the LG ThinQ app on your smartphone, which allows you to control it without pressing any buttons on the unit. LG also states that, with the door open, the Styler will double up as a dehumidifier, which adds a little more value to this premium-priced monolith.The LG Styler doesn't just do the obvious garments either, so alongside suits, shirts and trousers it's able to take on all sorts of crumpled or musty items. It'll revitalise bedding and, more usefully, fusty coats that have been at the back of the closet for a while, giving them a whole new lease of life. Pick the right program and you get your garments back feeling fresh, aired and crisp. We even revived some stuffed toys that were going to be passed on to a new owner.Water tanks in the base of the LG Styler require occasional attention (Image credit: Rob Clymo)DesignThe LG Styler does look the part. Our review sample came with a black glass front door, but there's a variation in white available too. It's rather tall (1850mm) and narrow (449mm) with a depth of 585mm, which means that it's a challenge to get into your preferred position. The LG Styler also weighs over 80 kilos and that too presents you with a problem if you live upstairs and don't have a lift. In its packaging it's unwieldy, and out of the cardboard and polystyrene protecting stuff it's just plain heavy.LG's promotional images show the Styler looking super-cool in plush apartments, with a dedicated clothes or dressing room proving to be the ideal location for it. You can also wangle it into fitted furniture if you want a seamless design feel. Bear in mind though that the LG Styler generates heat, so it needs room for air to circulate. The manual gives handy guidance on the tolerances.Filter sheets let the LG Styler add a touch of fragrance to your clothes (Image credit: Rob Clymo)Best vacuum cleaners: from cordless Dyson to robot RoombaThe appliance comes with a box of feet, which includes levelling options if you're installing it on hard floors. There's also a pair of spiky feet for carpet, which are designed to push through the fibres and the backing to hold the unit firmly in place.There's a degree of vibration generated by the LG Styler. During our time with it the steam machine seemed to almost oscillate, which is probably down to the hanger mechanism inside that jiggles backwards and forwards while the appliance does its stuff. The Styler is pretty quiet though with an operational volume of 40dB(A), thanks to its inverter motor, which is as good as they come. So, on a hard floor the LG Styler gets a thumbs-up on the operational front.SetupControls for the LG Styler are clear, concise and touch-sensitive (Image credit: LG)The LG Styler is actually a breeze to setup after you've gone through the rigmarole of getting it into position. You'll need close proximity to a mains plug socket, but aside from that it's self-contained. There are two small pull out tanks at the bottom front of the appliance, with the one on the left catching any post-program waste water. The one on the right is for fresh water, which can be straight from the tap rather than needing to be distilled. Easy.All of the interesting stuff happens on the front of the appliance, with that shiny glass door being home to an array of touch-sensitive LED function buttons. Here you can select your preferred mode (Refresh, Special Care, Sanitary, Gentle Dry), including the intensity of the program selection. These include Normal or Light for a quick once over through to Heavy for a full-works refresh. You can also delay the start.Program times are displayed in the door, so you know just how long things are going to take. Interestingly, we found that you can open the door mid-cycle, which does allow you the opportunity to see that shaking hanger system doing its thing. Open the door and you're greeted with a cool blue hue from the interior light.(Image credit: Rob Clymo)PerformanceWe loved the jaunty tone you get once a program has completed. It's almost like a low-key fanfare announcing that your laundry is ready to be revealed. However, opening that hefty door for the first time did reveal mixed results. We took things gingerly not wanting to shrink dried suits and shirts by accident. And this is the thing with the LG Styler: despite the comprehensive user guide it does take a little bit of getting used to. Initial runs left us with creases and a slight air if disappointment. However, with practice we were managing to get some really impressive results.The heat pump system seems efficient, while that TrueSteam nozzle at the bottom of the unit did a nice job on some stale smelling hats we placed on the rack just above. The LG Styler also seems fairly frugal on water usage, though you do need to replenish the tank from time to time. It'll tell you when that needs doing though. Energy usage on Refresh Normal mode is 1850W, though the appliance uses less if you're just drying.You can boost the appeal of the LG Styler by using filter sheets too. These are smelly paper sheets, impregnated with perfume that fit into a special steam slot at the bottom of the appliance. We had Aroma Sheet by Saffron filters with the demo model. As the machine aerates and steams your clothing so the aroma gets to permeate your clothes. It's an acquired taste, with our sample pack of by Saffron leaving things smelling basically fresh, but a little pongy. Think car air freshener here. Doubtless it'll really appeal to some.The LG Styler does have a neat way of pressing your trousers (Image credit: Rob Clymo)VerdictAs mentioned earlier, the LG Styler has an RRP of £1899. That's a lot of money, particularly for the level of capacity on offer within its tall and narrow design. While it hasn't really been designed for high volume use, it's therefore easy to imagine issues for anyone with two professionals in the house, both of whom need crisp and dry formal wear for work the next day. However, if you've got a small wardrobe, deep pockets, love cool tech and have the room then it's definitely one for your wants list.The best smart home devicesTODAY'S BEST DEALS
