If you have a tablet above all one of those Chinese tablets that seem to be everywhere and for some reason it sticks on the Android screen, then you will have Flash the firmware of your tablet as shown in our previous article, but the task is easier to say than to. I'm here to make the process much easier by guiding you through all the calvary so you can reuse your Android tablet again, so let's cut the chat-chat and find the firmware of your Chinese tablet, if you're looking for a firmware download just jump at the end of the article. How to identify your tablet processor and your plate ID? The process of identifying your tablet firmware begins with the knowledge of your tablet processor and the plate ID, you create it or not most of these basic Chinese tablets usually look like plates and similar processors on most of them, the names of the devices could change for example Alldaymall, Irulu, GPad or so on, but below them are looking like hardware and all you have is running around it. The two main types of processors you will find on your tablet are usually the A13 and A10 processors, respectively. To find out so much you will have to open your Tablet, don't be afraid is not as bad as it sounds trust me, here are the steps: 1. The tablets do not have screws that fill them in most cases, so you will have to find the resemblances that keep both halves together. 2. Once you have found the mat, use a set of tools like those used to open the phones or a blunt object and force it into the mat, it is best to start around the load port inMost of the time, the pieces will come apart with little trouble as long as it is firm - don't break the clips that hold the two halves together, but separate the halves until everything is disassembled.You can see the video for detailed instructions. 3. 3. both halves separate, carefully separate and observe wires like the one running from the speakers. 4. Look at the main part of the dashboard and you should see a processor looking towards A13 or A10 marked on them clearly: 5. Last look at the table for a number of its usually in the top section and it is clearly written, this will be your board ID, register it: That's what you just found your motherboard ID and processor, in this case the table on the tablet ID was: CB-M RU 94V-0 The processor was: A 13 So now I have to search Google for 'A13 CB-M RU 94V-0 Firmware' or you can check below.I have included a detailed list of the most ordered firmwares after the classification including the one of the tablet used in this tutorial.
