... KAGGLE COMPETITION WINNER ... FACEDAI INTERNATIONAL FELLOW ... AI Research Eng Lead at EarthSpecies.orgthis is a chapter free sample from my book, meta-learning: powerful Mental models for deep and flourishing learning in digital age. First thing you can learn to make deep learning, you have to become a developer. Being a developer is not only on programming. In the largest scheme of things, being able to write the code is just a small part of what a developer can do. If you should start everywhere, I would opt this part of the trip for fun. We want to enter the armed mentality and start feeling randomly joke on my computer. There is no better way to get this working on something you really like. I would like to easily. When it comes to learning, consistency beats intensity every time. When you're just starting something, there's no better way to stay consistent than practicing too much. I would still make rapid progress, because this time around, I'd know what to focus on. This is what the beginning of this chapter will cover. How to start the first stop would be to complete one of the programming moots. They don't teach you a lot about being a developer, but you teach you some things about the writing code. I was probably going to Harvard CS50 on Edx. And, as I want to have fun, I could choose the game programming track. Harvard CS50 has a fantastic thing for this: at the top of teaching how to program, he also teaches you on the computer and how it works! Two pigeons with a bean. However, regardless of which book of Mooc or programming you have chosen, it is difficult to make mistakes. The programming was taught for many generations and many good teachers are there outside. The biggest mistake you can do at this stage is to do more than a single programming course for beginners. The effort to learn any particular programming language is really good to be a mistake. It makes no sense to invest all your time in calligraphy learning if you have nothing to write! Likewise, it doesn't make a lot of way to work to build a table, but focus your commitment on a single leg and then complain that the table will not be! All that we need at this stage is a certain familiarity with the "à à à,~" programming concepts à enough so that we can perform significant online searches. The programming skills we need are the understanding of the value of the overflow of stack, documentation and how to reach both. This could ring the tongue in the cheek, but these abilities are sincerely at the center of a programming career. Add knowing some fundamental things about programming, and you have a very firm platform to build. How to move in the code is an essential ability of the next stage of the table we are assembling is our ability to move effectively in the code. This is not something that most programming courses cover, but it is an essential capacity for have. This reduces to learn how to use a very well code editor. Any important code editor will do it. Some people swear with TextMate, sublime text, atom, vascodi, emacs or vim. No matter what you choose. Concentrate the same attention on learning Love to write code and you will be all right. If you are absolutely lost on which to choose, you have chosen VSCODE. Don't worry about choosing too - à à à,~ "à à à,~ "à à à,~ Àjit it is not one that you have to attack forever. I don't know a single developer who has not tried more publishers during the Their career. However, I don't even know a single developer who is worth their salt that does not believe that learning to use an editor is an important ability. Control of You can give you the à €
