Gerhard Kittel (1888-1948) was the former professor of the New Testament to be Greifswald and Tbingen. He embarked on the Editorial Director of Theologisches Wrterbuch Zum Neuen Testament in 1928. The publisher of the Testament theologisches Wrterbuch Zum Neuen Testament, is professor of the New Testament at the University of Erlangen since 1954. Geoffrey W. Bromiley (1915-2009) was Professor Emeritus of the history of the Church and historical theology at the most full theological seminar in Pasadena, California. He was better known as the translator of numerous theological books, including the theological dictionary of 9 volumes of the New Testament. Theological reviews of the Old Testament dictionary. Vol. 9. By G. Johannes Botterweck, Helmer Rencger, Heinz-Josef Fabry. Pp. XXVI + 563. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Eerdmans, 1998. Cloth, $ 48.00. This is the ninth volume of the authorized and non-borrowed translation of the Teologisclres Worterbuch Zum Alten Testamell1. David Green gave us a very legible translation of twat of Jewish and biblical Hebrew words that appear by Miirad to Lliqa. Items are written by a variety of religious backgrounds in different parts of the world and from more theologically prospects. As in the previous eight volumes, the Of theological dictionary, the old Testammell1 (toot) treats the main Jewish or Aramaic entry, so all the known sister-in-laws or semantically related Lexemes. You can expect to find a discussion about the word etymology (including a discussion of the comparative semitica when it is available), a list of the distribution of the occurrences of the word in the Old Testament, the classical understanding of its syntactic uses, a discussion on its Theological meaning, any paralelos in the rolls of Septuagint or the Sea and finally a bibliography. If there are parallels to rabbinical use, or Found in the apocryption or pseudepigraphapraphaprapha, they're noted. The longest and most detailed of the eighty-three voices of these words that executes the form of MIRAD to NIQA is the theologically sensitive word Liephesh. Twenty-three © pages (PP. 497-519) are dedicated to the discussion of this term. Included is an interesting "Excursus: The Translation is Soul" ("PP. 508-517). This discussion by H. Seebass covers quite well the uses of context, but one is surprised to see PS 49:16 (15) "But God redeemed (Pid J) my life (Nephesh) from the grave "You will not receive more than just a simple list of those uses that have God as a subject. Certainly, here is a theologically significant text in a great excursion if ever there had been o ne! The discussion of the term massij. With its alternative meanings of "burden" or "expression" it is worthy of special note as an indicator of the balance and theological utility of TDOT. H. P. Miller correctly notes "The overwhelming preponderance of the oracles of disaster could be due to distortions of the meaning of" burden,"but continues to notice that one cannot argue against the meaning" stated "in any case for this to destroy the contrast very Jeremiah was doing in Gel 23:33 ("enunciation") against Jer 23:34, 36 and 38 ("burden") His point is well taken. Given that such a wide variety of writers and perspectives are included within a volume, there is almost room for trying to determine a point of view collected or emphasized. Insofar as the evidence pointed to Jewish studies 44 (2003) 224 reviews to represent not only what the selected word meant, but rather what the word meant within the phrase, to that extent we are given a rich resource with which to begin our work. It is in this way that much light can be shed on our work in Hebrew and Aramaic text. Certainly, as with wordbook dictionaries This is a more ambitious undertaking. But it is better to have tried and have others after years In this case, the Commission would never have had such a fantastic start in collecting linguistic data, as they were formed by usage and syntax.
