Even if you haven't watched any of the 'Demon Slayer' anime series, it's impossible not to notice the frenzy that immediately followed the release of the franchise's new film, 'Demon Slayer: Kimetsu no Yaiba the Movie: Mugen Train'. The movie - a sequel to the series - caused such a stir in Japan that it broke several records and even became the nation's highest grossing film in history. Yep, that's right - it knocked Ghibli's 'Spirited Away' off the top of the chart. Despite the film's record-breaking popularity, not everyone was able to make it to the cinema to see it in 2020 due to the coronavirus pandemic. If you didn't catch the production last autumn, don't worry - the movie will be out on DVD and Blu-ray in Japan from June 16. As an added bonus, the distributor is including English subtitles with the home video release, so English speakers won't have trouble following any of the fast-paced action. Prices start at ¥3,850 for the DVD and ¥4,400 for the Blu-ray version, with pre-order already available online. And for overseas Demon Slayer fans: the movie is set for both dubbed and subbed theatrical releases in North America on April 23 and digital release on June 22, with releases in other English-speaking countries sure to follow. He sees the thread of weakness and slices the demon's head off.A flashback into another time appears, showing the demon when he was young. He is feasting on a few innocents along the road, and Urokodaki comes in and challenges the demon. The demon is wounded and cornered as the swordsman rushes to him. Desperate, he runs to an alleyway before Urokodaki slices him clean.Back in the real world, the demon sees the swordmaster's face in Tanjiro. His severed head disintegrates into ash. He can't accept fate.The demon remembers his memories from when he was a child. He has a brother he dearly misses. Tanjiro touches the demon's hand and laments the latter's loss. He takes the demon's hand and prays.Tanjiro reflects on all the other students that the demon murdered, including Sabito and Makomo. Now, their souls can rest, and he prays for them.Final FewBut the test isn't over. As Tanjiro fights other demons, he keeps asking them to turn one back into a human, and none of them answer. Later, he runs into the border full of wisteria blossoms. The Final Selection ended, and only four people survived. Tanjiro is mad that he couldn't save the other candidate he met.The twin girls welcome and congratulate them. The sisters give them their ranks and uniforms. There are ten ranks among the corps, and the four of them start at the lowest.They are asked to choose an ore from which their blades will be forged. A Kasugai Crow is assigned to each of them for communication. However, one of the boys received a sparrow instead.The scarred-face candidate is impatient; he wants his katana now, but Tanjiro tells him to back off. The girls continue like nothing happened. There's a lot to choose from, but none of them know how to pick. Tanjiro uses his sense of smell and takes one.Long RoadOn the way home, Tanjiro feels discouraged as he realizes the journey to cure Nezuko is a long one. He falls to the ground carrying his heavy uniform, tired from the ordeal.Tanjiro finally arrives at Master Urokodaki's hut. He finds Nezuko awake, who quickly hugs him. He breaks down and cries, happy to finally see her up. Urokodaki hugs them both.He reports to his master that he killed the morphed demon. Urokodaki tells him that he'll encounter more of those types. Some demons have Blood Demon Arts that can produce supernatural spells. Fighting them will be more challenging than what he's experienced, but the master thinks he'll be fine.He asks if Nezuko is the same as those spell-casting demons, and she probably isn't. Right now, she's using sleep to counteract the fact that she isn't eating humans.The BladeSeveral days later, a strange man comes to the hut to deliver the Nichirin blade for Tanjiro. The blade's ores come from materials mined near the sunlight mountain. The man recognizes Tanjiro's bright red hair and eyes, saying he is a child born in fire. It's a good omen.The man asks Tanjiro to unsheathe the blade. It changes color based on the owner. Tanjiro inspects it, and it slowly adapts a black hue. The two masters are shocked as a pitch-black sword is an unusual thing. The blacksmith expresses his disappointment because he expected it to glow bright red.A crow comes to Tanjiro. He's tasked to go to a northeastern town where young girls are reported missing every night. He has to find the demon behind this and defeat it. The crow tells him to exercise caution for his first missionOur Thoughts:We see some great characters from the Final selection exam that I can't wait to meet and interact with Tanjiro again. The lore behind the Demon Slayer Corps keeps getting cooler. Synopsis When day breaks, there are only four swordsmen left standing after the seven-day battle. The guides who greet Tanjiro and the other survivors explain the Demon Slayer Corps system. All four are issued uniforms and Kasugai Crows as messengers, after which they must select the ore for their own Nichirin swords. After gazing hard at each lump of ore, and using his keen sense of smell, the one Tanjiro chooses is... [1] Plot After learning the morphed demon is responsible for killing numerous applicants, including Sakonji Urokodaki's past students, Tanjiro attacks him to prevent more lives being taken by the powerful creature. With his forehead to parry getting grabbed and Total Concentration Breathing to empower himself and reach its head, Tanjiro uses Water Breathing, First Form: Water Surface Slash to decapitate the monstrous demon. A younger Sakonji Urokodaki. The demon remembers the day he was captured and imprisoned; he was found eating several corpses by Sakonji. While still humanoid in form and strengthened by devouring several victims, the demon proved no match for the Demon Slayer. He was injured and fled the scene, only to be pursued by Sakonji, using his Water Breathing and incredible speed to sneak around the demon and defeat it. The demon sees Sakonji's image in Tanjiro and becomes shocked seeing his archenemy once again. Decapitated, the demon's head falls to the floor while his immense body begins to crumble to ash. He becomes angered that the last thing he will see is the face of a Demon Slayer. His soul finds himself in the afterlife, as the demon remembers his regret of devouring his brother soon after transforming. Tanjiro prays for the Hand Demon. Tanjiro approaches the demon's fading body and sees a hand extended to him. Detecting the scent of sadness from the demon, he gently holds it, causing the morphed demon to cry. Despite its evil deeds, Tanjiro refuses to rebuke it and prays that the next time the demon is reincarnated, he doesn't become a demon again. Amidst the dense fog, the morphed demon's soul sees light behind him and runs towards it, reincarnated as a boy asking for his brother's hand for comfort. With the death of the morphed demon, the souls of Sakonji's past students are finally able to depart into the afterlife, including Sabito and Makomo. For the next several days, Tanjiro continues to traverse the forest of Mount Fujikasane in the hopes of asking demons about returning someone back into a human. Instead of answering him, the demons attempt to devour him, forcing him to kill them without gaining an answer. Exhausted, he stops to catch his breath but quickly senses the scent of wisteria around him. He finds himself back at the shrines of the mountain, with the other survivors of Final Selection. He is shocked to see only four of them have survived after the seven days, including one girl; he also laments not being able to see the applicant he had saved from earlier, believing he was killed because he was unconscious. The blond boy next to him becomes scared that he survived, as he believes he would die anyway. The survivors of Final Selection. The twins who welcomed them to the mountain appear again, congratulated the four on their success. The last boy rejects their applause and asks what becomes of their situation now, demanding his sword. They state that they will first be given their uniform and are assigned the rank of Mizunoto, the lowest of ten ranks in the Demon Slayer Corps. They will then choose the ore of their swords but are told they will actually receive it at a later date. At the clap of one of the twins, birds descend to meet the four. The survivors are given Kasugai Crows to give them to new mission and for communication; the blond boy notices that he isn't given a crow but a sparrow instead. Tanjiro intervenes. Enraged, the boy grabs the hair of one of the twins, to the shock of Tanjiro and the blond boy, demanding he be given a Nichirin Sword. Tanjiro intervenes and grabs his arm, threatening to break it if he doesn't release his hold. When he implores him to try, Tanjiro tightens his grip, hurting the boy into releasing his hand. After the small scuffle, the four are presented with various ores for their sword to be made with. They are confused as they don't know what to look for in choosing an ore, but it is Tanjiro who makes the first choice by sniffing a sample and selecting it. At an unknown location, a man is informed by a Kasugai Crow that five have survived Final Selection. He is delighted at the news and ponders what kind of Demon Slayers they would become. Sakonji embraces the siblings. As he returns to Sakonji's hut, an utterly exhausted Tanjiro struggles to walk back, using a stick to support himself. He remembers that none of the demons he asked responded to his question and instead tried to kill him, without leaving him an answer to return Nezuko back into a human. As night falls, Tanjiro finally reaches Mount Sagiri. Unexpectedly, the door is kicked down and Nezuko walks outside. Relieved to see her, he tries to run but collapses in exhaustion. When he tries to get up, Nezuko runs to her brother and pulls him into a hug. Embracing his younger sister, Tanjiro cries and asks why she had suddenly slept for so long. Upon see the siblings, Sakonji warmly embraces them and is relieved that Tanjiro has returned alive, as tears fall from his mask. Inside, Sakonji is impressed to learn that it was Tanjiro who killed the morphed demon. He then explains that there are several kinds of demons. In particular, there are those that possess spells called Blood Demon Art, giving them supernatural abilities. He asks if Nezuko's long sleep is an example of one but Sakonji doesn't believe it to be so. He hypothesizes that Nezuko's long sleep is the alternative of devouring human flesh in order to recover. Several days later, a swordsmith appears and makes his way to Sakonji's hut. He introduces himself as Haganezuka and states that he has forged the sword for Tanjiro Kamado. When Tanjiro informs him he is the recipient, the swordsmith ignores him and talks about the sword instead. When offered tea inside, he instead talks about the materials for a Nichirin sword, Scarlet Crimson Iron Sand and Scarlet Crimson Ore. He explains that the materials absorb sunlight and that they are found on a mountain that is bathed in sunlight all day long. Inside his hut, Sakonji hears the two and becomes annoyed that Haganezuka is once again ignoring others to talk about his swords. Haganezuka meets Tanjiro. He turns to see Tanjiro, shocking the Demon Slayer with his Hyottoko mask. Haganezuka calls Tanjiro a "Child of Brightness"; confused, Tanjiro is told he is referring to his eye and hair color, believing that his family must work with fire and calling it lucky and cause for celebration. Tanjiro is surprised to learn about this fact, while Haganezuka believes that the sword will turn red for him. Tanjiro's blade becomes black inside, Tanjiro is provided with his Nichirin Sword, while Haganezuka mentions that they are also known as "Color Changing Swords", as they change color according to the user. Upon unsheathing his new weapon, the blade turns black. The result surprises both Haganezuka and Sakonji; Tanjiro becomes worried that it is a bad omen but Sakonji calms his concern by stating that black blades are simply uncommon. On the other hand, Haganezuka becomes infuriated since he hoped to see a bright red sword blade; he tackles Tanjiro and locks him in his legs, while Tanjiro becomes confused at his strange antics. At that moment, Tanjiro's Kasugai Crow arrives and provides him with details for his mission. He must make his way to a town in the northwest, where young girls are reported to have disappeared. In the town, the newest victim has just been taken, a girl taken from her fiancé in the middle of the night unexpectedly. Receiving the information, Tanjiro prepares himself for his first mission as a Demon Slayer. Characters in Order of Appearance Anime Notes References ↑ Episode 5 on the Official Website
