It is essential to choose the right type of resume format as it helps in strengthening your plus points and de-emphasizes your weaknesses. Chronological Type: The most common and systematic type is Chronological format, as the name suggests in this type of resume all the work and educational experiences are mentioned in a chronological order i.e. starting from the current position to the very first experience of the candidate or the order can be reversed. If you are an experience holder and have a solid working history then Chronological type is the best choice for you. Functional Type: These types of resume formats are majorly used in creative and development industry, where people do not pay much heed to employment history. Functional format helps in highlighting and emphasizing on the key skills of the candidate and talks less about the work history. This format can also be apt for the professionals having lapses in employment or have diverse occupation experience. Combination Type: As the name suggests, combination format is blend of Chronological and Functional type. In this type of format you add both your skill traits and your chronological order of work & education experience. Combination type helps you to express your overall qualities and sets you apart from other applicants. If you are looking for a job change or are a new graduate with limited experience then combination type is the perfect choice for you. Targeted Type: This type of resume format is the first choice of professionals who are looking for a specific job or position in a distinguished organization. In targeted format, the resume is exactly drafted as per the job description. For creating a target-oriented resume you need to do a few researches about the company, its leaders and the type of employees they hire.
