In plants against zombies, players place different types of plants and mushrooms, each with their own offensive or defensive capabilities, around a house to stop at zombie hordes from eating the residents' brain. The game field is divided into a number of horizontal lanes, and with rare exceptions, a zombie will move only to the player's house along a lane (the main exception is if it took a bite from a garlic). Most plants can only attack or defend against zombies in the lane, they are planted. In the next levels, players can buy upgrades so they can adapt their lawnmower to new environments such as pools or roofs. The game uses different types and layouts of different levels. The game begins in a front yard and progresses in the night levels, where the gameplay is more challenging, without the sun replenished, unless specific plants are used, the courtyard is visited, with an added pool, and the final levels are the levels of night pool (where the fog fills the right half of the screen except when specific plants are used), a storm of lightning in black tone (except when illuminated by flashes). Sporaly through the game, the player was warned through a zombie letter or addressed by a crazy Dave to prepare for an ambush, where the game takes on a bowling style, using the wall dice to vase the zombies, or a modified version of the normal Levels, in which the types of random plants appear on a small selection, and the player canplants without spending the sun. The player starts with a limited number of types of semi packs and slots for semi packs that can use during most levels. The number of slots can be increased through purchases with in-game money. At the beginning of a level, the player is shown the various types of zombies to aAnd given the opportunity to select which packs of seeds to be taken in the level. Several plants are nocturne, like mushrooms, with a lower sunlight cost and are ideal for nightlights. Some plants are very effective against specific types of zombies, such as magnet-shroom, which can remove metal objects from a zombie, such as helmets, buckets, stairs and pogostick. Zombies are also available in a series of types that have different attributes, in particular, speed, tolerance of damage and ability. Zombies include those who wear improvised reinforcements, those who are able to jump or fly over plants and a dancing zombie that has different designs depending on the version that can evoke other zombies from the ground.
