2 Snakes

Snakes are reptiles. They move by slithering on the ground. Did you know snakes do not have eyelids? They cannot blink! Snakes are different sizes. The smallest snake is the Thread snake. It is about the size of a toothpick.

Many snakes use camouflage to protect themselves. Others rattle their tail and hiss. Some people hunt snakes. They use snakeskin for belts, shoes, and purses!

Wild Scavenger Hunt

Animals in the desert have many adaptations that help them survive. One adaptation is the ability to store water in their bodies. This allows them to survive in dry environments where water is scarce. Another adaptation is the ability to dig burrows. This helps them stay cool during the day and warm during the night. Some animals, like the kangaroo rat, can even go for weeks without drinking water. This is because they can produce their own water from the seeds they eat.

1. What are the adaptations of animals in the desert?
a. Ability to store water in their bodies.
b. Ability to dig burrows.
c. Ability to produce their own water from seeds.

2. How do these adaptations help animals survive in the desert?
a. They help them stay cool during the day and warm during the night.
b. They help them find water in dry environments.
c. They help them produce their own water from seeds.

3. Why is it important for animals to have these adaptations?
a. They help them survive in dry environments.
b. They help them find water in dry environments.
c. They help them produce their own water from seeds.

Determining importance worksheets 3rd grade.

As with many things that students learn in school, there are several fundamental skills that are needed in order to develop newer, more complex skills. Determining importance is one of those fundamental skills that will lead to greater success in mastering other concepts and skills. For example, in order to summarize a text, a student needs to be able to determine the important information first before crafting a summary. In order to infer something about a text, students first need to have the ability to pick out important information that informs their inferences. Young readers tend to think that everything that they read is essential. However, students can't read effectively if they try balance every detail as equally important in their minds.
