The seasonal migration in spring and the fall had been their way of life, as long as anyone in the camp could remember. They moved their camp and their animals - sheep, goats, horses, donkeys and chickens - in order to find green pastures and proper temperatures. That year, a migrating family in the tribe allowed a stranger to make the journey with them. Explorers in the 19 th century found many potions and tools along rich copper seams in Michigan's upper pen - evidence that the main -historical inhabitants mined copper for thousands of years. John Halsey, former michigan state archeogoe, tells the story of those who discovered the ancient mines in this complete and engaging tale. All books since 1932, the University of Michigan Museum of Anthropological Archaeology (formerly the Museum of Anthropology) has published academic books that feature excellent scholarship, meticulous research and innovative interpretation. We continue this tradition today by publishing data  rich monographs on the archaeology and ethnology of North America, Latin  America, Africa, Asia and Europe. Our comprehensive books include simple illustrations, photographs, tables and graphic scans. They are invaluable records of archeological data, relevant for current and future research. by Joyce of the four major hieroglyphic writing systems of the old Mesoamerica Mesoamerica Maya, Mixtec and Aztec), Zapotec   widely considered one of the oldest and least studied. This volume assesses a variety of topics, including (1) the origins of the Zapotec script; 2) The diffuse of writing in the aftermath of the formation of the State of Monte Albn; (3) the use of Zapotec writing to celebrate inaugurations, inaugurations of buildings, dedications of building, apical ancestors, founding couples and noble genealogies; (4) the role of the Zapotec writing in changing the political agendas of the region; and (5) the decline of hieroglyphic writing in the Oaxaca Valley.
