Rachitic rosaries are also known as a rickety rosary or rib beads that appear as prominent knobs of bone at the costochondral joints of rickets patients. These knobs create the appearance of large beads under the skin of the ribcage, hence the name by analogy with the beads of a rosary. Rascular rosary is due to a calcium deficiency resulting in lack of mineralization and an excessive growth of the joint costochondral cartilage. Calcium deficiency can be caused by Rickets or other causes of calcium deficiency such as hypoparathyroidism. The Century Dictionary (Public Domain) Medical StatusRachy RosaryRachy Rosary on Chest X-ray The prominent bone knobs at the costochondrill joints of rickets patients are known as a rachy rosary or rib beads. The knobs create the appearance of large beads under the skin of the ribcage, hence the name by analogy with the beads of a Catholic Christian rosary.[1] Causes Causes include:[2] RicketsÂ: Nodularity at the costochondral junction (rachitic rosary). ScurvyÂ©: More angular costochondral junction with a sharper step-off (scurbutic rosary) and depressed sternum. Chondrodystrophy Pathophysiology Rascular rosary is due to a calcium deficiency resulting in a lack of mineralization and an excessive growth of the joint costochondral cartilage. Clinic Publishing Company. 7 (1). The first bone lesion that we find in incipient rickets is the beading of the ribs, the so-called rachitic rosary. This is due to an enlargement of the osteochondrial joints, and hence its name because of the fancy resemblance to the rosary used by the devout Catholic.- "Rochistic Rosary".The FreeDitionary.
