She began writing as a child, writing down her thoughts in diaries and writing stories. The summer before college, she wrote her first book, a novel. After that, she wrote regularly, but for herself.[4] Byrd attended Smith College[2], where she majored in history and art history, with a focus on the Middle Ages.[4] She then received her Juris Doctor from Albany Law School[2] and served for several years in public health[4], including Chief of Staff at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center in Boston, Massachusetts[2]. Bird married John Neville Blakemore III in 2001. Her new husband encouraged her to find an agent and sell her manuscripts. She found an agent and in 2002 wrote her first novel, a contemporary novel called Jumping Hearts.A few years later, Bird invented a world inhabited by vampires and began using the alias J.R. Station. These novels are part of a series known as the Brotherhood of the Black Daggers. Bird likes to write series using characters from her previous books. He likens the process of creating the series to "friends being met by other friends". Her characters are mostly alpha males, "the tougher, the conceited, the more arrogant, the better", while the heroines are intelligent and strong. Romance Writers of America gave her the 2007 RITA Award for Best Contemporary Short Novel for From the First. She has also been nominated for the Romantic Times Reviewer's Choice Awards six times and won once for Lover Awakened.
