What is the black flag emoji

The black flag emoji shows a single black flag on a flag pole or stick, blowing in the wind or being waved through the air. The flag is entirely black, but it can show highlights to indicate the flag is not stationary or two-dimensional, but rather in motion. The black flag emoji is somewhat ambiguous and has not a strictly defined meaning, but it can be used to suggest that something is deadly, unsafe, or a “no go area”. It is also used as the anti-white flag; whereas a white flag would be used to signify a surrender or a truce, the black flag can mean the beginning of a messaging war! How to use emoji? Black Flag — a picture of a Black Flag, usually waving. Being the opposite to the White Flag that symbolizes peace and capitulation, this one might be considered as a symbol of anarchism, revolve and etc. It also might be used in a context of showing grief and sorrow.Another possibility to use Black Flag emoji — if you want to put a “temporary stop” on some activity/event. It is coming actually from Racing practices especially with the Red flag or — as a similar idea — Triangle flag. Why is that? When the race is over there is the practice of waving the black and red flags together to mark the Final of the race.From the same racing context, exactly the penalties — use this emoji to show that somebody is punished/banned with the Black Flag. And of course, those of you who ♥ Love punk should definitely know the name of the band blackflag. This band influenced almost every band that claim to be “punk” after the 1980’s. Led by singer Henry Rollins.So, if you are listening to it or wanna listen with some friends — just add some Microphone, Music notes, Sign of the Horns and let the music flow through your veins. +addCopy & Paste this emoji:

All you need is to select, copy and paste this symbol: . Select this like a regular text, and copy to the clipboard. After doing that, switch to another website or application and paste emoji using context menu or keyboard. Hint: use Ctrl/Cmd+C keys to copy, and Ctrl/Cmd+V to paste emoji.Even if emoji symbol or smiley looks like a black square or question mark, it most probably will be converted into appropriate image by web site or application where you paste it.To avoid misunderstandings, first carefully read meaning and look at pictures before sending it to somebody: some emoji don't mean what you think they mean :-) Once upon a time, we had emotions. Now, we have Emojis.At our disposal, we have ten different expressions of anger, a dozen heart symbols, at least five stages of boredom, and more baby animals than you can shake a stick at. What we don't have, however, is a single black emoji. Now, a petition is circulating (and has amassed more than two thousand signatures) on DoSomething.org, urging Apple to “add more diversity” to the emoji spectrum. It states:When it comes to faces outside of yellow smileys, there’s a staggering lack of minority representation. The company has already taken steps to make Emojis more inclusive: iOS6 debuted same-sex couple Emojis. That’s why we’re asking Apple to take the lead again and diversify their emoji typeface, recognizing people of color as people... and Emojis. Everyone deserves to feel visible and represented.Apple’s new iOS7 is launching this fall, so let’s speak up and get this changed. Tell Apple to update their iOS7 emoji keyboard to include at least four faces with some melanin: a man, a woman, a boy, and a girl.Since the Japanese app burst onto the scene in 2010, it’s imprinted itself onto the interface of popular culture. Katy Perry packed her latest music video, Roar, with emoji-faces expressing the song’s lyrics on-screen. Apple integrated the emoji keyboard into its iOS last year, making those little faces even easier to access. And then there’s that notorious scene in HBO’s Girls, in which an exasperated Ray tells Shoshanna: “When you just send me a text full of Emojis, it is so easy to dismiss you. A panda next to a gun next to a wrapped gift?! It makes no sense!”Gawker re-imagined the conversation:But how much do these tiny, adorable images actually promote racial stereotypes? Um, a lot.There’s one emoji with a dark, burly moustache (Mexican), one with dark skin and a turban (Indian), and a vaguely Asian-looking emoji wearing an inexplicable red-and-green hat. The emoji expressions — happy, sad, angry, panicked, sleepy, shocked, worried, excited — are all Simpsons-yellow, but its spectrum of faces are, with the exceptions of those three, solely white.This is especially bizarre when you consider that it’s a Japanese application, and aside from ethnic origins, several cultures are well-represented: you have the Edward Munch “Scream” face; the Statue of Liberty; flags from every major country likely to use Emojis; and a multiethnic supply of food images.Not only are there no black emojis or even an appropriate array of minority faces, the races that are represented are bizarrely stereotyped. A turban? The bizarrely wide-set eyes of the “Asian” emoji? We dread to think what that little man with the hair down to his mouth is meant to represent. A Beefeater? A member of One Direction?There’s no question that Emojis lack diversity, and their climbing popularity in personal use and popular culture does require them to be more representative of the multiethnic population. The DoSomething.org petition, however, misses the point a little. It’s not Apple who should be called upon to regulate Emojis’ ethnic diversity. The petitioners promise to take the signatures directly to Apple CEO Tim Cook, which would be a) almost prohibitively difficult, and b) useless.Emoji is a third-party app, just like Facebook and Twitter are. (Speaking of Facebook, they’ve just announced emoticons as well.) Apple’s iOS has integrated it into their interface, meaning that it’s easier to access while typing, but they’ve done the same with Tweets and Facebook posts. No one is calling on Apple to ensure that abusive Tweets are removed from their TweetDeck, for example, or that certain Facebook posts be censored from the app. That’s because it’s not the responsibility of Apple to monitor every element of its third-party apps.Its Emojis responsibility to promote racial equality, just like it supported same-sex marriage when it added a same-sex couple to its emoticon spectrum. (They don’t have mouths, which is questionable, but, hey it’s a start?)
